

SOCIAL CHATTER AND HOME TALK

BOWEN-SPALDING WEDDING WAS SOCIETY EVENT

LIEUTENANT BOWEN AND HIS BRIDE.

THE characteristic glitter of gold braid and the flash of side arms, which make an army wedding more effective than any other, were in evidence at the ceremony which marked the nuptials of Miss Alice Spalding and Lieutenant George Bowen of the United States Army, at St. Andrew's Cathedral, Wednesday evening. Promptly at 8:30 o'clock a full-voiced choir, under the leadership of Hugo Herzer, came slowly down the aisle, singing a favorite hymn of the bride's, who is a devout Episcopalian. As soon as this choir reached the choir stalls, Miss Emily Taylor, the church organist, played "Lobengrin's wedding march," the four ushers, Lieutenant Pardee, of the 10th Infantry, Lieutenant James of the 5th Cavalry, Lieutenant Chilton of the 10th Infantry and Lieutenant Groninger of the 5th Cavalry, came slowly down the center aisle, followed by the ring bearer, Master Charles Chapman, the little son of Captain Chapman of the 10th Infantry. The following little flower girls, Miss Alice and Margaret Campbell, Miss Elsie Phillips, Miss Katherine Kennedy, and Keoloha Waterhouse, preceded the maid of honor up the aisle. These children were exceptionally pretty, and added to the effectiveness of the wedding procession. They were clad in Empire dresses of pink silk mull, Empire wreaths of eucalyptus roses were worn in their hair; they carried director's staffs of pink, with bows of tulle, and adorned with pink roses.

Miss Alice Spalding was attended by her two sisters, Mrs. M. M. Garrett, wife of Lieutenant Garrett of the 10th Infantry, acted as matron of honor and Miss Ethel Spalding was her bridesmaid. These beautiful girls made a stunning trio. The bride was the personification of loveliness and daintiness, in her bridal gown of white satin and lace. She is a petite blonde, with fair hair and large blue eyes, and is exceptionally pretty. Her wedding gown was cut in the extreme of fashion, the front of the gown was entirely of rose point lace, the tunic was caught here and there with natural orange blossoms. The upper portion of the frock was embroidered, and the new peasant sleeves of lace gave the finishing touch to this beautiful creation. A bridal veil was worn and was caught in a becoming manner by orange blossoms. The only jeweled ornament worn was a pearl pendant, which was the gift of the groom. Miss Spalding did not carry the conventional bride's bouquet, but substituted an illuminated wedding book bound in white vellum, which was the gift of Bishop and Mrs. Henry Bond Restarick—on arriving at the altar this book was handed to the Bishop, and the Episcopal marriage service was read from it. On account of the color scheme of the wedding being pink, Miss Ethel Spalding, the maid of honor, was clad in a French embroidered chiffon of a delicate shade of pink over pink satin. This dress was made with a tunic draped in the new parier effect, the tunic was edged with silver fringe, and the corsage was trimmed in cloth of silver, embroidered in silver. On this occasion Miss Ethel Spalding looked unusually beautiful; three silver bands caught on each side with silver roses were worn in the coiffure. The matron of honor, bridesmaid and flower girls wore gold brooches of empire wreaths, studded with pearls, which were gifts from the bride. Mrs. Garrett was effectively gowned in white satin, with a bertha of duchesse lace. This lace was arranged in cascades over the train of white satin, and was caught here and there, alternately with tulle, and delicate ornaments fashioned from cloth of gold. A handsome gold ornament was worn in the hair. The bridesmaid and matron of honor carried shower bouquets of La France roses. On arriving at the altar, the ushers drew their sabers and crossed them, for the bridal party to pass through. The St. Andrew's Cathedral was elaborately decorated for the occasion. Mrs. Arthur Wall, Miss Mary Catton, Miss Wilhelm Teahy and Miss Sophie Ryecroft, all intimate friends of the bride, had charge of the decorations. Great credit is due them for they were exceedingly beautiful. The altar was a mass of green foliage, the gigantic Kentia Recaba palm was effectively used; these palms are very rare and grow over twenty feet in height. Over a hundred of them were used, and they were so artistically arranged that one could well imagine that they had strayed into a tropical garden upon entering the church. Large baskets of La France roses and maiden hair were suspended overhead. The altar was banked with lilies and maidenhair fern, the altar rail was hidden by pink roses and smilax. The choir stalls were decorated with roses and white lilies and pots of maidenhair, while artistically placed, to break the set line of decoration, were tropical palms. The pulpit was completely concealed by feathery bamboo and pink duchess roses. On the top of the pulpit was placed a large fancy basket, containing these roses, the basket was tied with broad pink satin ribbon, the streamers trailing midst the greenery of bamboo and Australian maidenhair. The lectern was also banked with maidenhair and roses, as was also the chancel rail. Bishop Henry Bond Restarick, the groom, and his best man met the bride, who came in leaning on the arm of her father, Mr. Edward Irwin Spalding, a prominent capitalist of this city. The officers in their full dress uniforms, furnished an effective foil for the dainty gowns of the attendant maids.

After the impressive wedding service, the bride and groom, walked through an avenue of palms to the altar rail, where they knelt, and were pronounced man and wife, by the Bishop. After signing the register, Lieutenant and Mrs. George Cleveland Bowen, and their attendants, to the joyous strains on Mendelssohn's wedding march, left the church and motored to the bride's former home on Pinnabau avenue. Only the bridal party and relatives were invited to the house. The bride and groom received in the drawing room, which was decorated in American Beauty roses, the back drawing room, where the array of presents were displayed was also ornamented with American Beauty roses. Between the large arch ways, the feathery pepper tree formed a curtain of greenery. The corners of these rooms were decorated with potted palms and rare tropical plants. The chandeliers were festooned with smilax. Mr. and Mrs. Edward Irwin Spalding helped receive with the bride party, the latter was clad in a Paris gown of coral satin, with a draped skirt and trimmed with gold trimmings, embroidered in two shades of gold silk, outlined with threads of gold. Little Miss Helen Spalding, the youngest sister, looked extremely pretty in blue and white satin over blue. At this wedding many beautiful frocks were worn, they are too numerous to mention. Lieutenant and Mrs. Bowen are great social favorites in Honolulu, their hosts of friends showered them with remembrances. Among the most noticeable presents was a chest of silver from Tiffany's, containing all the flat silver for the table, there was cut glass galore, rare bric-a-brac and brassy, fancy lamps, tea and coffee services in silver, a dinner set, handsome embroidered linens, silver candelabra, chafin dishes, in fact, every thing that one would need to make a home attractive. A little before ten o'clock the wedding supper was served. The bridal table was arranged on the makai lanai, within a setting of white and green. A handsome cloth of Neapolitan lace covered the circular table in the center was placed a silver basket containing bride's roses, veiled in white tulle. At each corner of the basket, were silver candle sticks, ornamented with shades of Tiffany glass, with beaded fringe.

The central chandelier with innumerable electric lights was concealed by smilax and roses. The place cards were figures of brides, arranged on standards. These miniature brides were dressed in white satin, with the conventional wedding veil. Boxes of wedding cake, with Mr. and Mrs. Bowen's monogram embossed in silver were also found at the places. The bride's cake was cut by Mrs. Bowen with her husband's sword. This cake contained a ring, a coin and thimble. The ring fell to the lot of Lt. Chilton. Chilton also got the ring at Lt. and Mrs. Garrett's wedding, several years ago. The tradition being that he will be the next one to be married of the party. Now society is on the quiet to know who the lucky girl may be. Mrs. Garrett received the coin, but it would not be fair to mention who received the thimble for that is an omen of spinsterhood or bachelorhood. The table for the relatives was set in the large spacious dining room of the Spalding home adjoining
